HONOR SOCIETY
— STRENGTH & HONOR —

For many parents, sending their children off to college can be a stressful time. Many are unsure of how their child will fare without them, others want to ensure that their children are receiving the very best, and some simply want the comfort of knowing a support system is in place. HonorSociety.org can be a valuable tool for the integration of their child into a large, unfamiliar setting. For incoming Freshman, this is valuable, as many need a structured environment to flourish in after the support, time management, and order their parents bring to their lives is no longer available on a daily basis. For current students, parents can take comfort with the fact that their children receive the following from their membership with HonorSociety.org to help prepare them for life after school:

- Being Held Accountable: HonorSociety.org holds their members accountable for their grades, service in the community, and communication skills. We expect members to be proactive, have a team mentality and pursue personal excellence. These expectations are reflected by the society's core values, put in place to continuously remind members of what they are working to achieve.
- Leadership Skills: Each and every member of HonorSociety.org has an opportunity to become a leader. If their campus does not have a Chapter, they are encouraged to start one, and become the President of a society that will greatly impact other students. If they do have a chapter on campus, they may run for a multitude of other positions to contribute to the chapter.
- Real-World Skill Sets: Members are expected to show up on time, attend meetings, support their chapter and understand the importance of working cohesively with a team of people on projects. These skills sets are incredibly valuable for post-grad life.
- Benefits: Aside from ensuring an immediate support system and helping students hone valuable leadership and team skills, they also gain access to a number of exclusive benefits, all of them ranging in helpfulness based on where the student is at in their academic career.

Navigating through college and beyond can be a difficult, transitory time for a student, but it doesn't have to be. HonorSociety.org is there to ensure that members are safe, prioritizing their studies, and have a close-knit community to reach out to.
