

PROPAGANDA

Political propaganda is as powerful as ever, both in this US election season and in fomenting upheaval abroad. Three leading philosophers converse with Yale University's Jason Stanley about his new book, How Propaganda Works.

When is speech propaganda? What forms can it take? Is it ever acceptable in democracy? How does it affect public debate and decision-making? How does it subordinate groups?

A public forum in conjunction with the 2016 Pacific Division meeting of the American Philosophical Association.

Jason Stanley Jacob Urowsky Professor of Philosophy at Yale University and writes on social and political philosophy

Robert Gooding Williams M. Moran Weston/Black Alumni Council Professor of African-American Studies and Professor of Philosophy at Columbia University and an authority on race and social and political philosophy

Ishani Maitra professor of philosophy at the University of Michigan with expertise in the workings of language, feminist philosophy, and philosophy of law, especially free speech

Allen Wood Ruth Norman Halls Professor of Philosophy at Indiana University and a leading historian of ethics and social philosophy

10 am, Saturday, April 2
Koret Auditorium
San Francisco Public Library

American
Philosophical
Association