Project Purpose and Benefits for the Profession

Purpose. In the course of this project, we will develop and run two undergraduate seminars that focus on writing about specific themes in philosophical ethics.

Rationale. The need to develop strong writing skills as an undergraduate philosophy major is frequently discussed, but not always in a way that can help prepare students for the likely next stages in their academic lives. For example, though students in many undergraduate programs may be required to write lengthy papers, it is often not until graduate school that those students will be asked to think about the close connection between their grasp of philosophy and their ability to write philosophically. Even less frequently will the undergraduates be exposed to the process of choosing an area of specialization, and preparing papers for conferences and publication. With this in mind, our project seeks to develop and run the first two in a series of workshops that will encourage undergraduates to think more deeply about, and practice, their philosophical writing skills. These workshops will focus on writing in ethics, although subsequent workshops may focus on other areas in philosophy.

Background. This project is one component within a larger initiative developed by Dr. Chris Herrera, Associate Professor of Philosophy at Montclair State University. That initiative aims to introduce undergraduates who are thinking about graduate school to various scholarly activities in ethics as well as philosophy in general. The initiative will bring together faculty, graduate students, and undergraduates from various universities to participate in activities such as the following:

1. Ethics Consortium: This will draw on philosophy faculty, graduate students, and undergraduates from local universities and colleges so that they can discuss relevant and current issues in philosophical ethics. The format will usually be structured as a reading group and will center on recent publications in ethics. At other times, the group will meet for lecture and commentary on a topic that is ongoing in academic ethics. The focus of this consortium will be to introduce undergraduates to philosophical lectures and discussions in a structured and formal, yet inviting, setting. This will build on the discussions and debates that students may have been used to in their philosophy courses.
2. Mentoring Projects: There is currently a project that brings Montclair State University philosophy majors together with underclassman who are enrolled in philosophy classes (and may not have chosen a major). This dyad is then mentored by graduate students who are interested in careers in teaching. Dr. Herrera plans to extend this project to local High School Ethics classes as well.
3. Service Learning: One component of the ethics initiative is the development of service learning opportunities for students enrolled in ethics courses. As an example of such an opportunity, a student might volunteer for the State's Division of Youth and Family Services, and receive course credit for the hours provided. The student would then write a philosophical essay that explores the implications of that experience.
4. Online Journal: Another primary component of the ethics initiative is the development of an undergraduate journal in ethics. The first issue of this journal is expected to be online and published in Fall 2010.

Objectives. The proposed project has four objectives:

1. To develop tools for use in teaching and assessing scholarly writing with undergraduates, such as templates, rubrics, and guidelines for development, revision, and eventual submission.

2. To run two thematic workshops for undergraduate philosophy students who are considering graduate studies.
3. To follow up with students on the progress of the projects developed during the workshop.
4. To develop a workshop model for which guidelines are easily accessible.

Benefits. The accomplishment of these objectives will produce the following two primary benefits for the profession:

First, undergraduate students who are able to attend the proposed writing workshops will develop a better understanding of the various aspects of scholarly writing, such as the development of ideas, the process of revision, editing, composing, the selection of an audience, the submission process, etc., better preparing them to enter graduate school. Particularly in today's difficult job market, this in-depth exposure to the aims and process of scholarly writing will provided undergraduates with a unique perspective on the field and their future role in it.

Second, the development of tools for teaching and assessing philosophical writing, as well as the development of a workshop model that is easy to replicate, will allow other teachers to develop similar workshops for other areas of philosophy.

Workshop Overview. The writing workshops will run twice a year during the summer term and will be based on a sub-discipline in ethics, such as Bioethics. Students will have to apply and be accepted for these workshops. Their applications will include an abstract of a proposed paper relevant to the workshop theme. Each workshop will include components like

1. The Mechanics of Writing: composing, selecting an audience, citing, etc.
2. Incorporating Historical Sources
3. Editing and Peer-Editing
4. Revision
5. Using Writing Tools
6. Submitting to Conferences
7. The Publication Process
8. Graduate School, Dissertation, and Beyond

The components will be faculty guided, allowing some time for participants to work on their projects between each module. After these components, and following a short break, participants will be invited to choose from various breakout sessions, run by faculty, based on the earlier components that were presented. We will leave time at the end of each workshop for general collaboration, discussion, and to work on projects.

In the months following the workshop, faculty will be available to follow-up with students on the progress of their writing project in order to prepare it for submission to a conference or a journal.

Plan and Timeline for Achieving the Objectives

The following tasks comprise the proposed project:

- Faculty meet to develop the workshop and the tools for teaching and assessment (Fall 2010)
- Workshop Planning: advertisement, student applications, and selection process (Spring 2011)
- Undergraduate Ethics Workshops (Two, held in Summer 2011)
- Follow-up with workshop participants (Fall 2011)
- Development of workshop model and reporting (Spring 2012)

Project Budget with a Schedule for Allocation of Project Funds

- Project Budget

Item	Rate	Total
Workshop Costs	$700 x 2	$1,400
Undergraduate Scholarships	$150 x 8	$1,200
Faculty Stipend	$500 x 3 faculty members	$1,500
Fringe for Faculty	9% of $1,500	$135
Total		$4,235

- Note to University Administrators on Indirect Costs: The American Philosophical Association has a policy prohibiting universities from taking indirect costs from APA grant awards. See www.apa.udel.edu/apa/facilitiesandadministrativecostpolicy.html.

Designation of Project Fiscal Agent: Alexandra Perry, PerryA5@mail.montclair.edu

Information about Other Funding

We are currently seeking funding from other grant agencies for this project. In addition, we are applying for University-based funding for student assistance.

Description of Advertisement

Advertisement for the undergraduate ethics workshops will primarily be limited to various email lists and philosophy-related websites. Flyers will also be sent to Philosophy Departments and will include instructions for the student application process. In the final phase of the project, guidelines for the workshop model will be developed and available for scholars interested in developing similar initiatives.
