Healthcare and Homeland Security

Alexander Garza, MD, MPH
Chief Medical Officer, SSM Health, St. Louis, MO

Alexander Garza, MD, MPH, is chief medical officer for SSM Health in St. Louis. In the role, Dr. Garza oversees medical staff affairs, patient safety/quality and clinical resource management across SSM Health’s eight St. Louis hospitals. In addition, Dr. Garza is a member of the U.S. Army Reserve as preventative medicine officer, command surgeon and public health team chief.

Dr. Garza came to SSM Health from Saint Louis University where he was an associate dean for public health practice and associate professor of epidemiology at SLU’s College for Public Health and Social Justice. Prior to that, he served as assistant secretary and chief medical officer to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS). He legislated health, medical and biodefense authority for the DHS and played a critical role in protecting the United States from threats of terrorism.

Dr. Garza began his career as an emergency responder, working as a flight paramedic and EMT before practicing emergency medicine at several institutions across the country including Georgetown University School of Medicine and the University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Medicine.
