

FAREWELL TO NACA EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, GEORGE HARDING

It is with deep regret that NACA announces the resignation of our Executive Director, George Harding. After nearly five years, George is moving on to return to municipal animal care and control work, where he will serve as the Animal Services Manager for a community in Northern California.

During his time with NACA, George has provided valuable, consistent, and professional leadership. He has led our rebranding and transition with tremendous success. NACA has grown and thrived under George's direction resulting in improved training programs, website enhancements, successful annual conferences, and professional partnerships with other national organizations. George leaves NACA in a very strong position for future growth and we sincerely thank him for his contribution and leadership during his tenure as Executive Director.

Kimberly Cherney has been appointed Interim Executive Director by the NACA board until the recruitment of a new ED takes place. This will ensure continuity and aid the transition of a new permanent Executive Director. A search for a new leader will be launched shortly.

All of us here at NACA wish George a successful future in his new endeavors.
