FLORENCE 2000: A LOOK BACK
by John Monfasani

The biggest RSA conference ever is now history. Some would say that Florence 2000 was also the best RSA conference ever. It certainly was extraordinary: four days of conferencing, beginning with a plenary in the Salone del Cinquecento of the Palazzo Vecchio and the personal welcome of Mayor Domenici of Florence on Tuesday and ending with a plenary in the Odeon Theater and a reception at Harvard University’s Villa I Tatti on Friday, and in between 170 panels in seventeen current sessions in thirteen different sites all over Florence and even in Fiesole. And what sites! The Palazzo Strozzi of our host, the Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento, the Palazzo Lanfredini of the British Institute, the Palazzo Portinari (once the home of a confraternity) and the Palazzo Incontri of the Cassa di Risparmio di Firenze, the Palazzo Orlandini of the Monte dei Paschi di Siena, the Refettorio of the convent of San Marco, the seventeenth-century library of the Uffizi Galleries, the doctoral presentation rooms of the University of Florence, the modern Archivo di Stato on Viale Giovine Italia, the conference hall of the Province of Tuscany opposite the Medici Palace, the Kunsthistorisches (continued on page 2)

BIGGER STILL!
UPDATE ON CHICAGO 2001
by Deborah Parker

As befits Carl Sandburg’s city of “big shoulders,” the Chicago 2001 meeting will carry more panels than any previous RSA meeting. As this year’s committee (John Monfasani, SUNY/Albany; Deborah Parker, University of Virginia; Carla Zecher, Newberry Library; Frances Dolan, Miami University of Ohio; Martha Feldman, University of Chicago) can readily attest, there were an unprecedented number of submissions: at last count there was a total of 171 panels and fifteen concurrent sessions for each time slot.

Highlights of next year’s meeting will include special talks featuring: Edward Muir, the Bennett Lecturer; Ingrid D. Rowland, the Erasmus of Rotterdam Society speaker; and Jeffrey M. Muller and Pamela M. Jones, the plenary speakers. Several topics will be pursued over a series of panels, such as projects incorporating computer technology, emblems, poetry and iconography pertaining to Eleonora di Toledo, Paul Oskar Kristeller’s contribution to Renaissance studies, intellectual currents in the Renaissance, Renaissance English Text Society, and cartography.

Finally, there were the plenary sessions and panels themselves. To single out a few for special praise would imply an invidious comparison with those not named. But it is fair to say that some of the visual demonstrations were spectacular and that the panels and plenaries were quite consistently at an exceptionally high intellectual and scholarly level, no mean achievement in a conference with so many panels. RSA members are quite a talented group.

I myself owe a great debt of thanks to the RSA staff. In the months preceding Florence 2000, Laura Schwartz would often be at the office by 6:30 AM. Many were the times that David McKay would be working into the wee hours of the night in the office and at home. Without Maria Galetta, we would not have been able to manage in New York or in Florence. Karen Schecter’s attention to detail time and again proved invaluable. Andrew Sciallino, Pat Lennox, Ronda Arab, and Chloe Wheatley helped us in important ways at different times. Florence 2000 was very much their collective achievement.

We ran out of program books in Florence, but we still have some extras in the RSA office as well some extra posters. Those of you who would like either or both should contact the office. The price is $25 for the program book and $15 for the poster.

Publication schedule: Spring; Summer; Autumn; Winter (index)
The Renaissance Society of America will award eleven grants for a total amount of $27,000 in the year 2001.

Ten of the grants will be available to applicants in all fields. One grant will be available to applicants in the visual arts.

There are three series of grants:
- RSA RESEARCH GRANTS (9)
- RSA-ISTITUTO NAZIONALE GRANT FOR FLORENCE
- SAMUEL H. KRESS FOUNDATION FELLOWSHIP IN RENAISSANCE ART HISTORY

(1) The Renaissance Society of America will award up to nine RSA Research Grants in amounts ranging from $1,000 to $3,000, with the average amount expected to be about $2,000, for a total amount of $18,000. Three grants will be awarded in each of the three categories of Non-doctoral Scholar, Younger Scholar, and Senior Scholar. These Research Grants are available to applicants in all disciplines and topics dealing with the Renaissance.

(2) As the first fruit of Florence 2000, the RSA has entered into an agreement with the Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento in Florence to award one research grant for research in Florence. The purpose of the grant is to enable a scholar to use the archival, manuscript, and printed book collections of Florence and/or study the works of art of Florence and the surrounding area. RSA will award the recipient $2,000 toward travel and other costs. The Istituto will provide lodging in a pensione in Florence for up to four weeks and access to its collections. For 2001 the grant will be limited to applicants in the younger scholar categories.

(3) The Renaissance Society of America will award one Samuel H. Kress Foundation Fellowship in Renaissance Art History of $5,000 to an art historian in mid-career. The purpose of the fellowship is to enable a mid-career art historian to complete research, travel, or writing related to the preparation of a publishable manuscript on a Renaissance art historical topic. The generosity of the Samuel H. Kress Foundation has made this fellowship possible.

There will be a single competition for the eleven awards. Applicants for the RSA-Istituto and Kress awards should indicate that they wish to be considered for these awards. They will also be considered for RSA Research Grants. No applicant will receive more than one award. Please note that all applicants must be members of the Renaissance Society of America for the required number of years (see below). The following rules apply for all awards.

Research Grants will be awarded in three categories according to the career stage and employment circumstances of applicants. Applicants will compete for grants within ONE category only.

CATEGORIES:

I. Non-doctoral: These awards will support doctoral candidates, pre-university teachers, and other applicants lacking doctorates.

II. Younger Scholar: These awards will support assistant professors; associate professors in the first two years of appointment at that rank; temporary, adjunct, and/or part-time professors, and independent scholars holding the Ph.D. Younger scholars will normally hold the Ph.D.

III. Senior Scholar: These awards will support associate professors with more than two years at that rank, full professors, and retired professors.

Applicants must send SIX copies of each of the following to the RSA office by November 1, 2000:

1. A description of the research project, not exceeding 1,000 words. This should explain the project clearly and justify the use of the research materials and travel. Any supporting materials, such as copies of publications, will not be accepted.

2. A budget of anticipated expenses plus a statement of additional financial support, such as funds from the applicant’s institution.

3. A curriculum vitae which includes page numbers for all listed publications. Do not include university service, courses taught, and like material. All curricula vitae will be limited to FIVE pages.

4. A statement of the category in which the applicant wishes to be considered.

The primary purpose of the Research Grants is to enable scholars to study research materials, such as archival documents, manuscripts, rare printed editions, works of art, and major collections of primary and secondary sources essential to the applicant’s research but unavailable locally or nearby. A Research Grant will typically enable a scholar to travel to research materials in continental Europe, England, and/or repositories in the United States and Canada.

Research projects in all subjects and language areas within Renaissance Studies are eligible for support. Graduate students must be members of RSA for at least one year at the time of application. All other applicants must be members of RSA for at least three years at the time of application.

The Executive Board will appoint a jury drawn from different disciplines within Renaissance Studies. The criteria for judgment will be the scholarly excellence of the project and applicant, and the demonstrated need for access to research materials. The jury reserves the right to award fewer or more grants in one category, but only if there are insufficient applications of merit in one category. Awards will be announced as soon as possible after January 1, 2001.

Le Jardin de Melodie

Thursday, March 29, 4:00 PM
The Newberry Library East Hall
60 West Walton Street
Chicago, Illinois 60610

Join the Newberry Consort for Le Jardin de Melodie, a program of music from the 16th-century Paris court. Consort founding member David Douglass directs this Renaissance bouquet of instrumental dances and songs, and is joined by countertenor Drew Minter and gambists Mary Springfels, John Mark Rozendaal, and Craig Tompeter.

Culled from the wealth of music written for the entertainment of monarchs at the French court, the music ranges in character from a ceremonials royal entry to the lament of a great Queen on the death of her husband, from stately pavanes and galliards to lively and rustic branles.

POSITION
The Johns Hopkins University:
Early Modern Intellectual History
The Humanities Center seeks to make an appointment in the field of early modern intellectual history. Rank is open, although scholars with at least one book are preferred. Qualified candidates should send a letter stating research concerns, a recent vita, and a list of references to Professor Michael Fried, Director, Humanities Center, The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, MD 21218.
SPENSER AT KALAMAZOO
three open sessions on Edmund Spenser
36th International Congress
on Medieval Studies:
3-6 May, 2001
Abstracts may be submitted on any topic dealing with Spenser. We encourage submissions by newcomers and by established scholars of all ranks. Reading time for papers should be no more than twenty minutes. According to rules established by the Congress, those submitting abstracts for one session may not submit abstracts for other sessions in the same year. Because Kalamazoo has traditionally encouraged experiment, preliminary exploration, and discussion, papers submitted should not have been read elsewhere nor be scheduled for publication in the near future.

Please submit abstracts in FIVE COPIES. Include home and office phone numbers, mailing address, and e-mail address. Please mail, rather than fax, abstracts, as faxes are often very hard to read. Maximum length: 750 words. Deadline for abstracts: 15 Sept. 2000.

S
John Stow (1525-1605):
Author, editor, and reader
30 March - 1 April 2001
Corpus Christi College, Oxford, UK
John Stow, antiquarian, chronicler, and collector of books and manuscripts, is an undeniably significant figure in the historical and literary landscape of Elizabethan England. As an editor of Lydgate and Chaucer, as a chronicler of English history, and as a “surveyor” of London, he has proved a crucial source for modern literary and historical scholars. This three-day conference proposes to explore Stow’s literary and scholarly role in early modern England. Papers that address the following themes will be particularly welcome: Stow and the book trade, Stow as a collector of manuscripts and printed books, Stow as editor, Stow as reader, Stow and literature, Stow as historian, Stow as antiquarian, Stow’s patrons, legacy and influence. Full details of the program will be available by November 2000. Proposals of 300 words for papers of 20 minutes in length should reach the organizers (by mail or e-mail) by 20 September 2000.

The following is a call for papers for three Italian Art Society Sessions at the International Medieval Studies Congress May 3-6, 2001

The City as Ritual Space: Italy from late antiquity to the Renaissance
Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo [http://www.wmich.edu/medieval/congress/]. Deadline for submitting abstracts to chairs: September 15. This session focuses on the relationship between public space and urban rituals in the Italian city from late antiquity to the Renaissance. Papers may document rituals and their settings at articular historical moments. We also invite entries that trace the dynamic relationship between space and ritual, examining how rituals predetermine or alter the form of public space, and how public spaces in turn condition the kind of rituals that they frame. Papers may also examine how the symbiotic relationship between designed space and choreographed ritual enhance the formal capacities of space or ritual to express power structures and urban values.

The Home as Ritual Space: Late Medieval and Renaissance Italy

This session will examine domestic space and its attendant objects as a locus for ritual behavior in late Medieval and Renaissance Italy. Recent scholarship on domestic architecture and decorative arts has demonstrated both the importance of the private sphere and its often elaborate appearance. This highly charged familial environment had a direct impact on the rituals enacted within it, and this impact ranged from simply spatial (where the space enclosed the ritual) to more complexly behavioral (where the space determined the ritual). In the context of this session, rituals could encompass major life cycle events like childbirth, betrothal and marriage, and bereavement. Or they could involve more quotidian happenings such as daily devotional practices, meals, and business activities. Papers considering specific ceremonial behavior that utilizes domestic architecture and objects as vital components are desired.

The Art of Display in Ritual Space: Holy Images, Reliquaries, Liturgical Furnishings and Books in the High Middle Ages and Renaissance

Between the twelfth and seventeenth centuries, Italian ritual space was increasingly animated by dramatic acts of display. By the end of the twelfth century, a growing consensus on the doctrine of transubstantiation led to a more theatrical elevation of the eucharistic elements at the time of consecration, and after the official proclamation of transubstantiation at the Fourth Lateran Council in 1215, a new class of objects was designed specifically for the veneration and conservation of the eucharistic relics. Likewise, reliquary shrines, holy images and liturgical books shared in an enhanced emphasis on “ostension” or display. This session will focus on how portable objects and fixed liturgical furnishings were used, viewed and designed in response to ritual practices. Particularly welcome are investigations of how both formal and iconographic aspects of the objects enhanced the viewer’s appreciation of the spiritual and/or political ramifications of ritual action. Papers may consider an individual class of objects, such as altarpieces, monstrances, reliquary-busts, and illuminated liturgical manuscripts, or a collection of objects and their display at a particular site. Thomas E. A. Dale and Maria Saffiotti Dale Department of Art History, Elvehjem Museum of Art University of Wisconsin-Madison 800 University Avenue, Madison, WI 53706

Continuity and Change in Late Medieval and Renaissance Art in Italy This session will explore two fundamental and interdependent aspects of Italian visual culture: the persistence of tradition and the importance of innovation. The play between continuity and change can be seen in both the form and the content of art and architecture produced in Italy during the later medieval and early modern periods. Topics for consideration include: how earlier art was re-used and re-interpreted, how references served to convey sacred or socio-political messages, and how contact with other visual cultures encouraged transformation of the formal language, iconography, and theory of Italian art. Papers on all media as well as on architecture are welcome.

- Male Friendship in Renaissance Tragedy
- Plays within Plays
- Shakespeare and the Visual Arts
- Rhetoric and Music
- Art and Poetry

Deadline for papers (8-10 pages, 20 min.): December 31, 2000. Mail two copies of paper and 100-word abstract (on disk) to: George Klawitter, Program Chair Department of English St. Edward's University Austin, TX 78704 512-464-8850 georgek@admin.stedwards.edu.

Program participants must join SCR and are encouraged to submit publication-length versions to the journal Explorations in Renaissance Culture. Further details can be found on the conference website: <http://www.stedwards.edu/hum/klawitter/sgrc.html>.

Le 19e siècle “renaissant”:
the Renaissance in the 19th Century
4-6 October 2001
University of Toronto

Jointly organized by The Centre for Reforma tion and Renaissance Studies and The Joseph Sable Centre for 19th Century French Studies (University of Toronto)

The conference seeks to examine the renewed interest in the Renaissance evident in the works of scholars, artists, writers, and thinkers of the 19th Century all over Western Europe. We welcome proposals or panels that examine 19th-century scholarship on the Renaissance, the imitation and emulation of Renaissance works or styles, the renewed interest in humanism, neoplatonism, or in major figures of 15th and 16th-c. Europe. Proposals for papers on all aspects of the topic are welcome: Decorative arts, Literature(s) and history of the language(s), History/historiography, Art/art history, Architecture, Medicine/history of medicine, Music/opera, Book history/book collectors, Philosophy, Shakespeare in the 19th C, 19th-century reception of the Reformation.

Proposals may be submitted in French or English. Please submit a title, a 100 word abstract, and a half-page c.v. to the attention of Prof. Yannick Portebois, Director, Centre for 19th Century French Studies by e-mail: yannick.portebois@utoronto.ca; by mail: Centre for 19th Century French Studies in the John M. Kelly Library / U.S.M.C. / Univ. of Toronto / 113 St. Joseph Street, Toronto Ontario CANADA M5S 1J4. Deadline: 30 August, 2000.

Latin Germany - German Latinity:

Latin once was the “global” language of western culture, an international language used by natives of various regions for various purposes. Because of the historical focus of the conference, papers accepted for the conference can deal with phenomena from anywhere in the Sacrum Imperii in its pre-Pax-Westphalia-borders. Panels:

I. The classical humanist tradition in Germany and its aftermath (14-18th C)
II. Peculiarities of the German use of Latin (14-18th C)
III. Latin and the formation of German history (education, politics, learning, sciences; 14-18th C)
IV. Latin in Germany in the 19th and 20th C.
V. Transversal aspects (regions, functions, transformations; 14th-20th C)

CONFERENCE ON MEDIEVAL, RENAISSANCE AND EARLY MODERN STUDIES, UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, MARCH 22-25, 2001
NORTH & SOUTH: IDENTITY, IMAGINATION, & MEMORY IN PRE-MODERN CULTURES WORLD-WIDE
The North-South division is perhaps the most salient feature of the current global economy. Such differences have a long history. In many regions of the World climatic and geographical contrasts have occasioned conspicuous differences in crop production and diet, in shelter and clothing, and in a range of other markers and vehicles of cultural identity. The distinct character (stereo-) types ascribed by ancient philosophers, notably Aristotle, to Northerners and Southerners have had long-lasting effects that reverberate today. Within many geographically distinct regions the unification of North and South and their disparate societies has required immense effort and frequent bloodshed, from China to France or Britain in the Old World, to the US in the New World. On the other hand, the diversity and differences associated with geographical distance have often supplied and continue to supply positive cultural stimulus and opportunity. As we seek to come to terms with the rise of new economic and social relations between North and South in the modern era, it is timely to study the influence that pre-modern era southern societies exerted on the modern era northern societies. Understanding the cultural exchanges in crop production and diet, in shelter and clothing, and in a range of other markers and vehicles of cultural identity will be crucial to understanding the modern world.

DEADLINE FOR ALL ABSTRACTS: October 15, 2000.

ARTS OF CALCULATION: COUNTING, MEASUREMENT AND CULTURAL PRODUCTION
Tenth Annual Symposium: Medieval, Renaissance, and Baroque Studies Dept. of Foreign Languages and Literatures College of Arts and Sciences University of Miami 22-24 February 2001
The conference seeks to examine the cultural roles and effects of numbers and various kinds of counting in the medieval and early modern periods. It will provide a forum for exploring such questions as: What kinds of cultural work do numbers do? What roles does calculation play in colonial, imperial, and/or national projects and ideologies? What are the relationships between aesthetic practices and bureaucratic modes of calculation (such as accounting, census taking, and demography)? How do various kinds of literacy relate to what Ian Hacking has called “numeracy”? What kinds of agencies and subjectivities do numbers and numbering enable or foreclose? How do different kinds of economic strategies (e.g. exchange, gift, capital, debt, interest) affect representational strategies—and vice versa? What have been the social and political effects of temporal calculations (e.g. calendars, chronometers, annals, genealogies)? What cultural dynamics inform spatial measurements, such as cartography? What do analyses of counting practices tell us about the production of knowledge more generally? What have been the repercussions of musical and rhythmic forms? How does periodization shape the understanding of academic disciplines, and of history itself? Proposals addressing any world region or representative form are welcome; we are especially interested in interdisciplinary projects that interrogate the relations among humanistic calculations (e.g. literature, historiography, art, architecture, music, dance) and histories of science and political philosophy.
Keynote Speaker: Timothy J. Reiss, New York University Author mostly recently of Knowledge, Discovery and Imagination in Early Modern Europe (Cambridge, 1997)
We welcome abstracts for 20-minute papers, as well as proposals for alternative presentation formats (e.g., full panels, round tables, debates, performance, etc.). This is a small conference, with no concurrent panels; sessions will be scheduled in the configurations most appropriate to the proposals. The conference will conclude with a summary panel discussion.
Send proposals by 15 October 2000 to one of the co-organizers; e-mail preferred.

SHELL GAMES: SCAMS, FRAUDS AND DECEITS (1300-1650)
This multi-disciplinary conference will explore the practice of deception in late medieval and early modern cultures and ask how those who study the past can use such schemes as a vehicle to advance our understanding of the intellectual, economic, social and political climate of the period. The conference is scheduled to take place 28-29 April 2001, at Victoria University in the University of Toronto. Conference organizers invite submissions for 20 minute papers before 30 June 2000. Abstracts should be no more than 150 words. I Medici in Rete: Ricerca e Progettualità Scientifica a Proposito dell’archivio Mediceo avanti il Principato

The Medici on the Net: Research and Scientific Plans for the Archivio Mediceo avanti il Principato

Sept. 2000, Florence, Archivio di Stato:

The Archivio di Stato di Firenze, in collaboration with the Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento and the Harvard University Center for Renaissance Studies at Villa I Tatti, is planning a conference this September intended to deepen our knowledge of one of its most important and most consulted collections, the Fondo Mediceo avanti il Principato. A series of meetings between Italian and international scholars will explore research problems and highlight particular moments in the history of the archive. In addition, the conference will sponsor a Poster section where one can announce work in progress whose research goals involve the Fondo Mediceo avanti il Principato to a significant degree. Consult the website of the Archivio di Stato di Firenze: (www.archiviodistato.firenze.it/manife/map.htm).

Kristeller was born in Berlin in 1905. He received his doctorate in 1929 with a dissertation on Plotinus. After having studied with Jaeger and Norden he moved to Heidelberg to work with Martin Heidegger under whose guidance he prepared his Habilitationsschrift, choosing as his topic the thought of the Renaissance philosopher Marsilio Ficino. Kristeller enjoyed recounting in private conversations the flattering remarks Heidegger made on his seminar lectures. Given this, I believe it is opportune to keep in mind Heidegger’s thoughts in order to better understand aspects of Kristeller’s views on Italian humanism.

Nevertheless, Kristeller was forced to abandon Germany with the ascension to power of Nazism, a decision that struck a deep wound in his soul, a wound never to be healed even if, in his last years he could speak of Germany and the frequently terrible history of this century with serenity and detachment. For those who have labored on the Renaissance and continue to do so, the name and work of Kristeller remain central and fundamental. It is common knowledge that in our country there have existed, and for some time dominated, interpretations sharply differing from those of Kristeller, even those standing in direct opposition to his. For many of us the teachings of another great master of scholarship on humanism and the Renaissance, Eugenio Garin, are very important. It is he who consistently stressed the idea that humanism is a new concept of the world, that humanistic “philology” is a new philosophy (explicitly following the teaching of Giovanni Gentile), that the civil aspect is the essential feature of this new reality (following the thought of Hans Baron, another important Jewish scholar who emigrated to America). Kristeller, as I have noted, moved in another direction, specifying the origins and reasons for the ascendancy of humanism (the Italian tradition of medieval rhetoric; the so-called medieval humanism, that is, the study of classical literature, Greek and Latin poetry and prose, all but abandoned in the West during the Middle Ages). He observed that humanism developed within specific limits of rhetorical and philological studies and that, from its beginnings it is, was, and remains a cultural movement confined to classical and rhetorical ends, capable of influencing only externally and indirectly other fields of human knowledge—from philosophy to theology, from law to medicine or mathematics. In summary, for Kristeller, humanism is neither a philosophy nor an ideology. It is rather, as has been stated, a vision quite different from those traditions of scholarship on humanism and the Renaissance predominant in Italy, connected, it must be stressed, to philosophy and the history of philosophy, clearly expressed in an important monograph Kristeller wrote on Marsilio Ficino, but distinctly differing in tone and position from Garin’s essay Immagini e simboli in Marsilio Ficino published in 1951.

However, this is neither the time nor the place to make an accounting of these positions, much less to favor one interpretation of humanism and the Renaissance over another, both of which have been validated from many points of view by twentieth-century scholarship. It should be stressed rather that Kristeller was not only a noteworthy historian of Renaissance philosophy, but also one of the most acute interpreters of cultural humanism. He was also an extraordinary researcher of new manuscripts, new documents, new sources. No publication has surpassed his Iter Italicum, in which he provided descriptions of an extraordinary number of manuscripts on humanism and the Renaissance. One can state without exaggeration that Kristeller’s erudition places him in a group of exceptionally gifted exponents of human knowledge such as Ludovico Antonio Muratori.

Shortly after Kristeller’s death, I happened to speak of him at length with Eugenio Garin, his friend and colleague. Both led long lives filled with study and research, neither one ever having lived in unthinking idleness. Garin recalled an afternoon in Florence, with Giovanni Gentile present, at the former location of the publisher Olschki. Presenting Kristeller’s Supplementum Ficinianum, Gentile announced unequivocally “Basterebbe il Supplementum per assicurarci un posto di assoluto rilievo nei nostri studi...”.

It is quite true: with the serenity and detachment granted to one who has concluded a study, Garin was able to capture the right phrase, even though as we well know, Paul Oskar Kristeller represented so much more. With the work he carried on, with the discoveries he made, his contribution was to an altered perception of the traditional concept of the Renaissance. For this, each and every one of us, now and in the future, must be deeply grateful to him.

--Michele Ciliberto
On 2 February 2000 Giuseppe Billanovich passed away; his death marks the loss of one of the most distinguished, prolific and inspiring humanist scholars of the twentieth century, a scholar whose work was characterized by its profound learning, meticulous attention to detail and—at the same time—a capacity for far-reaching conclusions. It has been acknowledged as such by generations of readers all over the world.

During his long career, Prof. Billanovich published more than two hundred books, articles and reviews. The center of his interests remained early Italian humanism, and especially Petrarch the scholar. In 1947 Petrarca letterato appeared. The book, as is generally acknowledged, fundamentally altered received notions about the origin and growth of the humanist movement. With this book, and with studies such as I primi umanisti e le tradizioni dei classici latini, Billanovich pushed back the origins of Italian humanism—thus, in a way, making unimportant the question of whether there was a break between medieval and humanist culture, between the Christian Middle Ages and the modern age. The Renaissance is often considered to have provided the common cultural mold of the Western World; Billanovich drew attention to its medieval roots through which Renaissance humanism is dependent on the culture of the Church Fathers and late antiquity. This view of the cultural history of Europe is present also in the very name of one of the journals which Billanovich founded, that is Italia Medioevale e Umanistica.

The work of Billanovich has been of importance for classicists, medievalists and students of Renaissance humanism alike. In his books and articles he would often take as his point of departure the manuscripts of classical authors and then reveal their influence on those who owned, read, and copied them, and trace the libraries through which they may have passed. He would place the technical results in a historical context and eventually provide his reader with a general view of humanistic scholarship. A case in point is his seminal study on “Petrarch and the Textual Tradition of Livy” which appeared in the Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes in 1951, and its continuation, La Tradizione del testo di Livio e le origini del umanesimo, published thirty years later. Taking as his point of departure Harleian 2493, the magnificent Livy manuscript now in the British Library, Billanovich proved that it belonged to Petrarch and discussed the textual tradition of especially the third and fourth Decades, part of which is in Petrarch’s own hand. This section of Petrarch’s Livy, that is, to be precise, books 26-40, had puzzled students of the textual tradition of Livy. In the article Billanovich discussed the two main problems posed by this manuscript: how did Petrarch obtain the many rare variants in these books and, moreover, how did he come to possess the priceless text of the fourth Decade, which at the time was something almost miraculous? The solution Billanovich offers was reached through the study of the Cathedral registers of Chartres and the intellectual interests of Petrarch’s friends in Avignon, in this case Landolfo Colonna, a relative of Petrarch’s patrons. According to Billanovich, Landolfo borrowed an old and exceedingly valuable manuscript from the Cathedral library. Petrarch used Landolfo’s copy of it to emend his own Livy, the Harleian manuscript, thus becoming, in Billanovich’s own words, “a deciding factor in carrying the tradition of the Ab urbe condita from the Middle Ages over into the Renaissance.”

I have related the content of this article at some length, not only because of the great impact it has had, but also because it touches on another central theme in Billanovich’s works, the role of Avignon in the development of the early humanist movement. He often returned to the importance of the encounter of French and Italian culture during the “Babylonian exile” of the popes, and he described how the great libraries of France, especially the Cathedral libraries, preserved in the early Trecento many treasures of Latin literature which had perished elsewhere, but the scholars who were both able to value them and zealous enough to copy them carefully were the Italians in and around Avignon, above all Petrarch and his circle. The combination of these two factors did a great deal to make the early humanist revival of learning possible in the first place.

Giuseppe Billanovich’s outstanding merits in the field of medieval and Renaissance studies have been honored with memberships of numerous learned societies and academies. An eloquent testimony to his standing in the academic life of his own country is the fact that the first chair in Medieval and Humanistic Philology in Italy was created in 1955 especially for him at the Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore at Milan. At this university, where he taught until his retirement, Billanovich created a rich and fruitful environment. He and his many students and collaborators created a vigorous school of studies which has produced—and continues to produce—many important editions of humanist writers in the series Thesaurus Mundi and the studies in Medioevo e Umanesimo, a series also founded by him, as was Studi Petrarcheschi.

I myself have had the good fortune to spend some time in Billanovich’s department in Milan, if I may be excused at this point for dwelling on some personal recollections. As a very young scholar I came to Milan to work on Lorenzo Valla; I still remember Billanovich’s great friendliness and generosity on that occasion. He not only helped me get grants to cover the expenses, he also took care that I receive the practical information and make the scholarly contacts necessary to make my stay a success. The contact continued over the years, during which he also arranged meetings with students and colleagues of his.

When, not so very long ago, I was one of the organisers of a conference on the role of Avignon in Italian culture, held at the Danish Academy in Rome, I was very happy that Prof. Billanovich agreed to give a paper. For two days he was a lively and inspiring participant in every discussion, inside and outside the lecture room, and the meeting profited much more from his engaged presence than can be seen from the mere publication of the proceedings. That was the last time I met him; it is a memory that I am glad to evoke on an occasion like this.

Marianne Pade University of Copenhagen

John C. Olin, professor emeritus of History at Fordham University, died on June 6, 2000 at his home in West Nyack, New York, surrounded by his loving wife Marian and their four children: Mary Beth, John, Margaret, and Thomas. He was born in Buffalo, New York, on October 7, 1915. He earned a B.A. in History in 1937 from Canisius College, an M.A. from Fordham University in 1941, and a Ph.D. from Columbia University in 1960.

His most significant contribution to sixteenth century studies was his belief that more research needed to be undertaken on the Catholic Reformation to truly comprehend the events of that era. John thus led the way in fostering interest in and developing the field of Catholic Reformation studies through his own scholarly publications, especially through his critical editions of key texts that illustrated the characteristics of the age.

His Christian Humanism and the Reformation: Selected Writings of Erasmus (1965, 1975, 1987) made available a body of writings hitherto largely unavailable in English which conveyed the essential thought of this great reformer of the sixteenth century, with whom John had a great affinity. This collection was followed by two other works: A Reformation Debate: Sadoleto’s Letter to the Genevans and Calvin’s Reply (1966), and The Catholic Reformation: Savonarola to Ignattius Loyola (1969, 1992), which made a clear distinction between the spontaneous reforms taking place within the Church and those which reacted to the emergence of Protestantism.

In addition to these collections, he also edited a translation of The Autobiography of St. Ignattius Loyola, with Related Documents (1974, 1993), and published another edition of texts pertinent to the Catholic Reformation, Catholic Reform from Cardinal Ximenes to the Council of Trent, 1495-1563 (1990). Perhaps fittingly, on the day of his death a new edition of A Reformation Debate was published by Fordham University Press.

The publication of his own studies were of equal importance, among them Six Essays on Erasmus and a Translation of Erasmus’ Letter to Carondiolet, 1523 (1979), Interpreting Thomas More’s Utopia (1990), and Erasmus, Utopia, and the Jesus: Essays on the Outreach of Humanism (1994).

The culmination of his years working on Erasmus was the publication of The Edition of St. Jerome in the University of Toronto’s Collected Works of Erasmus series (1992).

Besides his scholarship, John was a superb teacher and mentor. He approached the past with a sense of respect, humility, and awe. He fed into the intellectual curiosity of his students and led them down a path of discovery and endless possibilities. In many ways, he embodied the ideals of Christian humanism.

The annual meeting of the Renaissance Society of America

April 11 through April 13, 2002

The program committee invites abstracts for individual papers as well as proposals for panels. The chair of the panel should be someone other than one of the speakers. Send eight (8) copies of each abstract and proposal to the RSA office (rsa@is.nyu.edu) or fax (212-995-4205). Do not send disks with submissions.

Revised submission guidelines will be published in the January 2001 RNN and posted on the Society’s website (www.r-s-a.org).
