CALL FOR PAPERS: FORMS OF REASON

Reason has gone by many names — λόγος, ratio, raison, Vernunft — and has appeared in a variety of forms in the history of philosophy. Reason has been the determining ground of existence; the intelligibility of the world; the specific difference between humans and other animals; the ruling part of the soul; a cognitive faculty; an instrument of legitimation; and has played many other roles as well. The History of Philosophy Society's (HOPS) fourth annual conference will explore these roles by surveying the forms in which reason has appeared in the history of philosophy and the way its forms have been contested.

Submission requirements

HOPS submissions should generally focus on a single author from a single period prior to the 20th century, however, essays treating multiple authors will be considered. Submissions should be prepared for anonymous review with the author's name, institutional affiliation and contact information on a separate title page. Papers should be no more than 40 minutes reading length.

Questions and submissions can be sent to historyofphilosophysociety@gmail.com no later than Jan. 15, 2018.
