Global Data on Philanthropy—What Researchers Need to Know

2:00 to 3:30 pm

H Building: H-2

Panelists:

Lawrence McGill, Foundation Center

Jesse Barnett, Hudson Institute

Tao Ze, China Foundation Center

Lester Salamon, Johns Hopkins University, Center for Civil Society Studies

Chair:

Lawrence McGill, Foundation Center

Efforts to understand the global dimensions of philanthropic giving are hampered by significant data lacunae. Initiatives from within the philanthropy itself are beginning to address this problem as foundations strive to improve their efficacy by becoming more data-driven. This session will acquaint researchers with these field-building initiatives, report on the progress that is being made, and discuss issues of data quality, ownership, and access. Panelists will include representatives of the Hudson Institute, the Johns Hopkins Center for Civil Society Studies, the Foundation Center, and the China Foundation Center, who will describe the challenges of compiling a picture of global giving using existing data sources, the work of the WINGS philanthropy data network to generate better data on philanthropy, and efforts to promote philanthropic transparency in China and elsewhere.

The session will focus on the role of German foundations in the development of a European civil society. In the last years, decisions made on the supranational level of the EU increasingly got important for political, economic and social life in Europe. But till today, civil societies of the member states operate predominantly on a local or national level. To accompany political processes, a responsive European civil society as counterpart of the EU is needed, but mostly lacks.

Foundations like to see themselves as innovators and could play an important role in enabling civil society actors to get linked in international networks, in organizing dialog and self-organization across borders. In the session, researchers and representatives of German foundations discuss which role foundations actually play in developing a European civil society. And also, which role they could play in future.

Given the pressures confronting civil society organizations around the world today, the experience of a major American foundation with a history of supporting such organizations promises useful contemporary lessons. The Ford Foundation has been involved with civil society-and philanthropy-strengthening endeavors since the 1950s. This proposed panel will gather participants who have been engaged in the support of philanthropic and civil society organizations in Africa and Asia. They will reflect upon the Foundation’s historical experiences and current issues affecting civil society. Some of the participants have worked under repressive regimes and war zones. They have all witnessed changing relationships between the private sector, government, and civil society organizations.

This panel is being organized as part of the Rockefeller Archive Center’s Ford Foundation History Project under the leadership of Patricia Rosenfield, RAC Senior Fellow and Rachel Wimpee, ACLS Public Fellow. The thrust of the project is to elucidate the Ford Foundation’s history in order to inform its current activities.

Tom Bannister, China Development Brief

NGOs in China have for many years been a weak and marginalised group. However, recently this situation has changed. Government attitudes are becoming more welcoming and society is becoming more aware. As China develops, its burgeoning civil society is becoming increasingly multifaceted, networked, mainstreamed, and international.

Research into this dynamic and complex sector has also become more diverse. Significantly, domestic researchers are beginning to move beyond the boundaries that previously restrained their research scope and focus. New trends are beginning to be studied such as the ability of Chinese NGOs to influence government policy-making, the growing numbers of Chinese NGOs interested in operating abroad, and the government purchasing of services from domestic NGOs. On top of these very recent trends, there are increasingly mature initiatives to better understand issues of accountability, co-operation, and capacity; three areas that significantly inhibit the sustainable growth of the sector.

This Special Session will explore the state of research into this vibrant sector by analyzing current research settings and active research projects. It will investigate the challenges faced by researchers, and suggest solutions to overcome them. Finally it will look at current needs and future research agendas.

Public trust in governing institutions worldwide is at an all-time low--including those institutions tasked with serving as watchdogs. The result? A growing sense of disenfranchisement and powerlessness in the face of a series of global crises that directly affect all of us. Discussions on the post-2015 Development Framework repeatedly call for placing people in the centre of development. The 2nd State of the World's Volunteerism Report (SWVR) will explore how volunteerism as a form of civic engagement contributes to democratic governance. This session will present and discuss several research papers on volunteerism and governance. In addition, a Global Volunteer Research Agenda will be proposed. Participants will be invited to provide inputs and discuss implications for volunteerism research, practice, and policy-making in the future.

Plenary Session

Oxford Style Debate: What Kind of Civil Society for What Kind of Europe? Towards a New Research Agenda

Europe has developed a rich tapestry of civil society traditions and patterns that ultimately reflect state-society relations and that are captured by terms as subsidiarity, big society, social economy and others. What are the potentials of the various civil society models in Europe? Is there a new Pan-European society emerging and what would be its relation to a more nationality oriented civil society?

Edith Archambault and Rupert Graf Strachwitz will facilitate and contribute to this debate.

Professor Archambault, Professor Emeritus of Université de Paris 1
Panthéon-Sorbonne, Centre d'Economie de la Sorbonne (CES).
Rupert Strachwitz, Maecenata Institute in Berlin
