Young Radiologist Interest Group: The Future of Ultrasound

The SRU is seeking interested participants for a new interest group aimed at forming a network of junior radiologists interested in ultrasound. The aim of this group is to connect assistant professors, clinical instructors, and fellows whose primary clinical and/or research interest is ultrasound. We hope to provide a resource for collaboration including research, technology, education and networking. The vision is to connect “point persons” at universities throughout our country who will represent and strengthen the ultrasound community within radiology in the years to come.

I am an assistant professor in ultrasound at University of California San Francisco and will function as the leader of this group and Dr. Deborah Levine, Professor of Radiology, Harvard Medical School will provide mentorship for the group.

A kickoff luncheon is planned for the 2016 SRU Annual Meeting in Baltimore, Maryland on Friday October 21, 2016 at 12:30. For young radiologists (less than age 40 or those at academic rank of Assistant Professor or below) interested in this group as well as more senior faculty interested in mentorship for this group, please send an email to tara.morgan@ucsf.edu. If you are at the SRU annual meeting this October you will be invited to the luncheon. However, even if you can’t make it in person to our inaugural meeting, we would like to know of your interest in participating.

The SRU, Dr. Levine, and I are excited about the potential positive impact this group will have on junior radiologists, the SRU, and all of radiology. We look forward to hearing from you!

Sincerely,

Tara Ann Morgan, MD
