Wal-Mart v. Dukes: Supreme Court Rejects Nationwide Class Action

Author: Caren Skversky
Constangy, Brooks & Smith, LLP

On June 20, 2011, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its decision in Wal-Mart v. Dukes, a highly followed sex discrimination case brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In sum, the Court affirmed that members of a putative class must have enough in common with each other that it makes sense to treat them as “one” for purposes of the litigation. The Court also said that individualized claims for relief, including monetary damages and injunctions, must proceed under rules that allow putative class members to “opt out” and that provide procedural safeguards for defendants. The Supreme Court’s decision appears to be a victory for “one” for purposes of the litigation. The Court also said that individualized claims for relief, including monetary damages and injunctions, must proceed under rules prohibiting sex discrimination, the company allowed most employment decisions to be made by local management. Among other things, the plaintiffs alleged that this “delegation of authority” tended to prevent women from advancing in the organization as quickly or as far as their male counterparts. However, according to Justice Antonin Scalia, who wrote for the 5-4 majority, the lawsuit would have involved the challenge of more than a million discrete employment decisions made by thousands of managers at local levels. The procedural rules governing class actions require, among other things, that the class members share “common questions of law or fact.” The majority, consisting of Scalia, Chief Justice John Roberts, and Justices Samuel Alito, Anthony Kennedy, and Clarence Thomas, found that there was no “commonality” among the members of the putative class. “Without some glue holding the alleged reasons for all those decisions together,” Scalia said, “it will be impossible to say that examination of all the class members’ claims for relief will produce a common answer to the crucial question of why I was disfavored.”

Reaction from Employees

Not surprisingly, the Dukes decision was not well received by everyone. Employee and women’s rights advocates have already been showing support for legislation to overturn key elements of the Dukes decision, a strategy that has succeeded in the past on issues like back pay, disparate-impact law and the scope of coverage of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Marcia D. Greenberger, Founder and Co-President of the National Women’s Law Center (NWLC), issued a statement that this “devastating decision undoing the rights of millions of women across the country to come together and hold their employers accountable for their discriminatory practices” has “set back efforts by a large group of women who have been fighting for ten years to challenge the discrimination they described in receiving lower pay and fewer promotions — even when the women had higher performance ratings than their male counterparts.” She continued that beyond this case and these plaintiffs, the ruling “undermines the very purposes of the class action mechanism and is tantamount to closing the courthouse door on millions of women who cannot vindicate their rights one person at a time.”

Members of Congress have spoken out on what they perceive to be the ramifications of the Dukes decision as well. Representative Nancy Pelosi and other House Democrats also reacted strongly to the opinion and vowed to take action. Indeed, as Greenberger states, “Congress must do all it can to ensure that this decision does not stand, including by passing the Paycheck Fairness Act. The women of Wal-Mart — and women everywhere — must have a real chance to gain equal pay and a fairer workplace.”

The Effect of Dukes on Employers

While the Dukes decision is welcome for employers, a few cautions are worthy of discussion. As a preliminary matter, the Supreme Court did not rule on the merits of the plaintiffs’ claims, so Wal-Mart may face thousands of individual or multiple-plaintiff lawsuits alleging that a particular manager or supervisor discriminated against women, and the plaintiffs may still prevail. Second, although the majority affirmed the delegation of decision making authority to local management, employers will want to make sure that their policies, procedures, and related materials prohibit the use of impermissible considerations and that local management is adequately trained about their equal employment opportunity obligations. Third, whether they remain vulnerable to class litigation if the plaintiffs can identify a “common” policy or practice that results in discrimination.

Morning Star School in Tampa has been a school focused on inclusion and serving underserved populations of children with disabilities since the school began in 1958.

Morning Star School is a non-profit school that opened its doors with a mission to provide specialized education for children with physical disabilities. In the mid-1960’s, the needs of the community began to change from the physically impaired child to that of the educable mentally handicapped youngster. Morning Star School adapted to meet the changing needs of families in the Tampa Bay community. During this time, Morning Star relocated and built a new school adjacent to Most Holy Redeemer Catholic School. This was done so that Morning Star School students would have a greater opportunity to interact with non-handicapped children.

As educational services for the mentally handicapped population became more accessible in the public school system, the demand for services for children with learning disabilities increased. Since the mid-1970’s, Morning Star School has been educating elementary to junior-high age children with learning disabilities and related difficulties. Children from families living in Hillsborough, Pinellas and Pasco Counties attend Morning Star School in Tampa. Parents work closely with the Morning Star School team to ensure that their children receive the type of specialized, caring education they need to achieve greater success in their lives. To help students transition into a more traditional high school setting, Morning Star School offers a full academic program in a caring environment. Although Morning Star School is a Catholic Diocesan school, its mission is to serve children with disabilities regardless of faith, ethnicity or socioeconomic status. Approximately 60% of students are Catholic and 40% are non-Catholic.

In recent years, the student population has shifted significantly. The number of female students has increased each year and now comprises almost 40% of the total student body. In terms of ethnicity, the student population has a growing number of minorities and is quite diverse. Approximately 50% of students are from minority ethnic groups: 31% Hispanic, 8% Asian, 7% African American, and 4% multi-racial.

The Diocesan School and Morning Star School leadership come from diverse backgrounds and bring multiple talents and experiences to benefit the children and families we serve. Special Education instructors, a Licensed Guidance Counselor and a dedicated administrative staff team work together with parents and other service providers, such as speech and occupational therapists, to meet the academic, psychological, emotional, physical and spiritual needs of each child. Children attend small classes (10-12 students) where they build upon their individual strengths. Students learn how to compensate for their specific disabilities and become advocates for themselves. These children develop the understanding that they are unique and valued. They are sensitive to the needs of others and become actively involved in service projects designed to help others in our community.

The teachers at Morning Star School are Special Education Instructors. They formulate an Educational Information Plan (EIP) for each student and use a variety of instructional strategies and approaches to meet each student’s unique individual needs. Every activity included in the school program is structured as a learning experience. One-on-one teaching, small group education, and school-wide initiatives are used in conjunction with manipulatives, role playing, class discussions, cooperative learning groups, assistive technology, audio-visual materials, and other techniques to provide an effective learning experience.

Morning Star students experience a wide variety of disabilities and exceptionalities that make it more difficult for them to process and/or retain what they learn, and more difficult for them to communicate with others. The types of disabilities and related learning difficulties represented within the school are diverse and include/ have included such conditions as:

- Specific Learning Disabilities:
  - Dyslexia – difficulty processing language
  - Dyscalculia – difficulty with math
  - Dysgraphia – difficulty with writing
  - Dyspraxia (Sensory Integration Disorder) – difficulty with fine motor skills
  - Auditory Processing Disorder – difficulty hearing differences between sounds
  - Visual Processing Disorder – difficulty interpreting visual information
- Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)/Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)
- Speech Impairments
- Specific Language Impairment (SLI), a developmental language disorder
- Asperger’s Syndrome
- Developmentally Delayed
- Emotionally Handicapped
- Mild Intellectual Disorders
- Visual Impairments
- Deaf or Hard of Hearing
- High Functioning Autistic
- Pervasive Development Disorders
- Sensory Integration Disorder

The Morning Star School family is a closely knit one. We strive to live up to our motto: “Morning Star School – A safe and caring school where each student is valued and his or her uniqueness is celebrated.”

The Spring HR Tampa PHR/SPHR Study Group was a learning experience for several Chapter members and provided a way to connect with other HR professionals in a small classroom setting. Facilitating this group of motivated and passionate HR professionals was a joy, as we all focused on content of the SHRM’s body of knowledge for three months. Because of the time, efforts, energies, and dedication of the participants and the volunteers who facilitated classes, and thanks to DeVry University, several HR Tampa members will be positively impacting their organizations as they use the knowledge and skills gained in this safe and fast-paced learning environment.

First, to our volunteers -
Because of the talents, experience, expertise, and skills of these facilitator/instructor volunteers, the participants received an abundance of diverse knowledge, focused on the six major areas identified by HRCI for the certification exams. We would like to thank these professionals who shared their passion and their time with the study group. Thank you:
- Jenni Stone, MSHRM, PHR
- David Steffen, Esq.
- Barbara Matsumoto, SPHR
- David Pearson, Esq.
- Richard Daniel, MA, SPHR
- Phillip Russell, Esq.
- Kim Campbell, PhdED, SPHR
- Richard Daniel, MA, SPHR

To our study group participants -
There were 12 participants who showed up consistently each and every week. In spite of work schedules and family responsibilities, apart from hours of reading and studying and taking practice tests, giving up the luxury of leisure, these serious professionals showed up. Not just in body, but in mind and spirit as well. They were ready to learn. Some of the study group members were not sitting for an exam, but were using this as a professional development tool. Congratulations to each person who came out with the objective of learning a comprehensive body of knowledge.

There were also some participants who thought they were going to be sitting for an exam, but then realized they were unable to prioritize this at this time, and decided to continue to study now, with the goal of sitting later. It was great to see this commitment, and I am confident employers throughout the community are benefiting from the knowledge learned through the readings, exercises, and preparation!

“Life is a perfect adventure, a game that cannot be won or lost, only played.” (PCE) And, you came ‘to play’ each week. Thank you for providing the facilitators and the other participants all you offered us!
